

More and more individuals are earning income from gig work, and some doing multiple gigs. It can be a challenge to know how to list this on a resume, especially if the work is more occasional (e.g., only on college breaks). Here is how we suggest you address this type of work on your resume—both formatting and the writing of effective/powerful bullets.

Example 1—Works the gig on college breaks

Student lives in Orlando and attends college at PBA in West Palm Beach. During the summer (10 weeks), Christmas break (3 weeks), and spring break (4 days), he works for Door Dash.

DOOR DASH, Orlando, FL

Delivery Associate, Weekends/College Breaks, August 2021 – Present

Example 2 – Multiple gig jobs & same type of work

Student has multiple gig jobs through websites like Fiverr, Upwork, and 99Designs. Another student works for both Uber and Lyft. In either case they do the same type of work for different gig companies.

Fiverr, Upwork, 99Designs—Remote/Online

Gig Graphic Designer, January – Present

Uber & Lyft, West Palm Beach, FL | Chicago, IL

Gig Worker, November 2021 – May 2022

Pro Tip

Remember, resumes aren't alibis. The goal of your resume isn't to account for your whereabouts during certain periods of time, but rather to help prospective employers see at a glance if candidates meet the necessary criteria and qualifications to warrant an interview

Writing Powerful Bullets for Gig Jobs

Describe the skills used and acquired in doing the work that would be of interest to the employer you are writing the resume for. Think about transferable skills. Do not just describe the work done—we all know what delivery drivers do. Here are ways to write more impressive bullets, by answering these questions:

- How did you do the work better or differently than others in this type of gig job?
- What transferable skills did you utilize to make you effective in this gig job?
- What did you accomplish that might be worth noting? E.g., designed 15 possible logos for client, or drove an average of 150 miles/day, or earned a 5-star rating.

Below are some examples:

- Rideshare Driver: Focused on the needs and wants of rideshare customers by providing water, snacks, and customized music selections. Earned on average 22% in tips and 5-star rating from 300+ customers.
- Delivery Driver: Delivered groceries and meals on-time or early 98% of the time. Maximized efficiency by 20% by strategically mapping out routes and quickly learning locations of preferred grocers/restaurants. Managed multiple orders and deliveries effectively, while providing the highest level of customer service.
- General Gig Jobs: Created own 50-hour a week schedule demonstrating self-motivation, and earning over 3,000 in one month. Set and achieved personal goal to earn $10,000 in one summer.
